To Mr./Ms. _____

Dear subscriber, we are pleased to present to you the March issue of IRAMONIT. Our new report, which we have prepared on the basis of both the primary and Iran-based resources, as usual, includes comprehensive analyses of the prominent issues at the regional and international level along with the domestic developments in Iran. Therefore, it is a valuable resource and a work worth adding to your personal library, just like our previous issues.

In more than two months since US President Joe Biden took office, there has been no significant change in the US-Iran relations yet. On the other hand, closely monitoring Iran's relations both with the regional and international powers maintains its importance in regulating the bilateral and regional relations of Turkey and the relevant actors.

Our March issue is enriched with infographics, and a monthly chronology contains eight articles and a comprehensive special file. The titles of the articles are as follows:

"Prominent Developments in Iranian Foreign Policy in March, The New Focal Point of Turkey-Iran-Israel Competition: Basra, Israel-Syria Secret Talks, Sinjar as a Field for Pragmatic Cooperation: Perspectives of PKK and Iran, "Cautious Optimism" for the Iranian Oil Industry in 1400, Farewell to 4,200: Fixed Exchange Rate Report in Iran, Political Participation From the Presidential Election Perspective, Iran's Approach to the Uyghur (East Turkestan) Issue".

The health care system, which is one of the most frequently voiced issues together with the global pandemic and also contains some clues about the development and welfare level of a country, is discussed in this month's special file. Although various health policies aimed at improving the health care system and extending its scope have been conducted in order to build a welfare state since the Islamic Revolution, the desired results in the system have not been achieved due to economic and political constraints. This paper titled "Health Care System in the Islamic Republic of Iran" examines the components and variables of the system by discussing the Iranian health care system with regard to various indicators and contexts. Furthermore, the performance of the health care system in Iran against the global pandemic affecting the whole world and the policies implemented in the fight against the pandemic are thoroughly evaluated in this study.

I would like to welcome our new subscribers, and I wish you a month filled with good health and happiness and hope to see you in our following issues.

Dr. HAKKI UYGUR
Acting President
